

When I was growing up I wanted to be Rambo. I think it had a lot to do with the desire to walk around with my shirt off and to have all the lumpy muscle bits akin to all of the superhero/masters of the universe types.

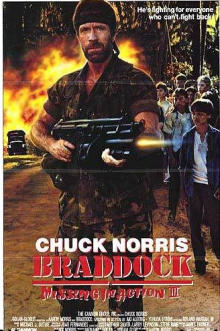

The headband was definitely appealing, though it's interesting how Rambo's has evolved from the camp Flashdance style of the 80's (above) into the new Roger Federer dirty version (top).

The new film should actually have Rambo playing the final of the US Open against Federer with a racquet/crossbow contraption that he could fire at the umpire when he doesn't agree with the line calls.

On the topic of headbands, Ralph Macchio had a ridiculous headband. It kind of has an IKEA catalogue influence.

Chuck (who is fighting for everyone who can't fight back - including non headband wearers) didn't really wear one - except when blatantly pretending to be Rambo. Chuck Norris is one of the only bearded action stars - and I think this is ultimately what kept him from reaching true B-grade action hero status. He looks kind of like a Sesame Street character.

Heard he was a top 5 picture from antacool here, you should seriously consider the

Heard he was a top 5 picture from antacool here, you should seriously consider the